Peanut Pork.

One of the finest products of Florida's soil and climate, a genuine epicure's dish, is peanut pork. The time may come, and there is no good reason why it should not, when Florida will be as celebrated for its peanut pork as Rhode Island is for its turkeys and England for its mutton. Even the celebrated chestnut-fed pork of Italy is not superior to it, nor yet the savory goose of New Jersey, fattened on rice and celery. Pig pork of itself is almost as toothsome as a roast fowl. Then when there is imparted to it the incomparable flavor of the favorite nut of Americans it has a rich and nutty quality which is a little hard to beat. For this purpose we want the pure razorback of the piney woods; under the peanut regime its flesh yields a more savory repast than that of the best improved breeds of the north.—Jacksonville (Fla.) Citizen.

BREVITIES OF FUN

"My boy," said old Drywater, "in all creation you won't find any animal except man who makes a habit of smoking." "Yes, sir. But neither do I know any other animal that cooks its meals."—Tit-Bits.

"Why do people take so much interest in what they call Darkest Africa, anyhow?" "I presume they have a kind of idea it would be a good thing to go there and grope with the country."—Chicago Tribune.

—Jagson—"I tried to pay the new woman a compliment last night in my speech, but it didn't seem to be appreciated." Bagson—"What did you say?" Jagson—"I said that the new woman would leave large footprints on the sands of time."—Tit-Bits.

—The Dominant Real—"And do you really love me?" she faltered. "Can you doubt me?" he earnestly demanded, "familiar as you must be with the tendencies of the literature of the day?" That is to say, dear reader, if this be literature, then his love is real.—Detroit Journal.

—Now, Thomas," said the teacher, "write me a sentence in which the words pine and butternut are used." And Thomas wrote: "The fellow, felt almighty tough, when him his best girl cut; First he thought he'd pine away, and then he thought he'd butternut."—Detroit Journal.

—Two Bad Scars.—"Yes," said the retired army officer, "I can recall two occasions when I was most terribly frightened." "Oh," exclaimed the romantic young lady, "do tell me about them. I suppose it happened when you were fighting the Indians." "No," he replied; "one time was when I was married and the other time was when we had our baby christened."—Cleveland Leader.

—Doing His Best.—He was a new clerk in the big retail establishment, and he was anxious to make a record as a salesman. A young woman inquired: "Can you let me look at some safety bicycles?" He turned away to get information about the stock, and, returning, said, with a winsome smile: "I'm very sorry, miss, but we're out of safety bicycles. But we have some fine safety matches."—Washington Star.

NEW ENGLISH GUN.

Made of Tubes of Equal Length, Which Are Telescoped.

A new idea in big guns has just been developed by an inventor of Openshaw, England. His gun is called the Gledhill built up gun and takes its name partly from its inventor and partly from the manner of its construction. The inventor is Manassah Gledhill. He makes his gun by building up a series of steel tubes, so formed, fitted together and united as to insure great strength and durability while permitting the ready removal of any section without injury of the other sections, a formation valuable because it permits the replacement of an inner lining. This part often becomes worn by constant use, so as to affect the accuracy of the firing, says an exchange.

The most important feature of the gun is the construction of the steel tubes which are uniformly tapered throughout their length. By this means the required diminution in the external diameter of the gun from the breech to the muzzle, is obtained without shoulders or sudden changes of thickness, which are thought prejudicial to a gun's strength. The tapering tubes are made so that they closely fit, one over the other, beginning with the inner lining and ending with the outer shell.

Another advantage is the comparative ease of manufacture. The builder can form the outside of one tube and bore out the other tube so that both are continuously tapered at the same angle from end to end, and the external diameter of the one is so nearly the same as the internal diameter of the other that the outer tube can be placed very nearly in its ultimate position upon the inner tube without pressure, while a slight hydraulic pressure forces the tube to its exact position. In this way one tube after another is added and the gun built up of four steel sections.

At the breech, the tapering tubes are secured by a series of screw bolts. The breech plug is usually cylindrical, but sometimes made taper, with continuous screw threads to facilitate the opening and closing of the breech.

The new gun is so perfectly fitted that not only can its various parts be withdrawn and replaced readily, but in case of a desire to remove the gun from one point to another the sections can be easily separated, packed and transported.
